Legal help when someone dies

When someone close to you dies, you will rightly want to spend your time with your family, close relatives and friends.

There will however still remain the necessary legalities to sort out.

This is where we can help.

From the first telephone call to our office, much of the immediate strain, stress and frustration will be taken away.

Our lawyers have years of experience serving the community. We therefore know how to help our clients quietly and sensitively at this most difficult of times.

The legalities

Our supportive lawyers will take you through the process of what may (or may not) need to be done. We can then contact the necessary authorities and organisations.

Whether or not a Will has been made, we can then explain to you what happens to the money, property and debts of the person who has just died.

We can then help you with any application for Probate together with other ongoing matters, including tax liability.

Right at the outset we will provide you with an estimate of the likely fees to be incurred. These fees will not be increased without your agreement.

The next step

Contact our Probate Helpdesk. It is just a telephone call away.

We set up our Probate Helpdesk so that clients are able to obtain immediate, informal but informed advice at the time when they need it most.

The Probate Helpdesk is entirely free. And of course it is utterly confidential.

In the event that you eventually ask our probate lawyers to deal with the estate of the person who has just died, then your family and yourself can rest assured that the work will be handled competently, correctly and professionally.
