YOUR WILL

A small price to pay

A small price to pay
Bringing certainty in an uncertain world...

“What if I don’t make a Will...?”

This can be disastrous.

Your children and loved ones could be made vulnerable and exposed. Your property and other valuables could go to the wrong person and a significant proportion of your hard-earned money could be paid over to the government rather than your family.

By not bothering to make a Will, you are therefore making no provision as to who should be the guardians of your children or who should look after your estate upon your death.

It is also far more likely that your estate will end up in dispute, causing untold extra distress and costs to your family at a time when they can least afford it.

“What if I do make a Will...?”

Making a Will brings certainty.

Making a Will brings certainty and peace of mind to yourself, knowing that when you die, you have left provision and arrangements for your family and loved ones. It means that there will be no misconception of your wishes - your Will becomes your will and any Inheritance Tax liability is at worst limited or possibly even avoided.

Equally important, making a Will brings certainty and peace of mind to your family. At a time of emotional trauma and stress, a Will helps from the small things like funeral arrangements to the big things like those you have left behind knowing that you cared enough to think of them.
